

Repair or Replace

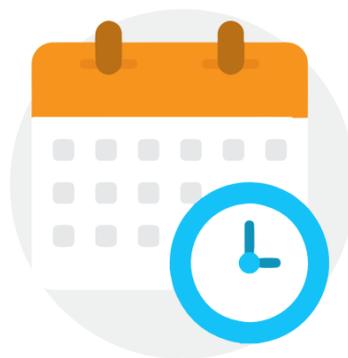

SIGNS TO REPLACE YOUR FURNACE

If the furnace or air conditioner in your Cypress home is struggling to keep the cold and heat outside where it belongs, it may be time for a replacement. However, how do you know when to replace your air conditioner or when a simple repair will do? Other than simply not working anymore, here are some tell-tale signs to help determine whether a furnace replacement is needed for your Cypress, TX home.

Aging System

With certain things, like capacitors, you can repair your air conditioner or furnace and get it back up and running again in no time at all. However, at some point in time, a unit just simply needs to be replaced. Even the best unit installed by the best AC contractor only has a lifespan of 10 to 20 years. So, if your furnace is acting up and was installed over a decade ago, it may be time to look into air conditioning replacement financing or at least consider a newer unit.

Rising Costs

An increase in your monthly energy bills could be a sign of a poorly running system. After doing the math and accounting for rising usage and/or energy prices, if you're paying more each month than you were during the same time the previous year, your system may be running less efficiently and in need of replacement.

Frequent Repairs

Review your repair bills and add up how much you've spent on AC or furnace repairs within the past two years. When you combine this figure with the extra money your old system is likely costing you each month, an air conditioning installation price may not seem too bad.

Uneven Heating

If some of the rooms in your Cypress home always seem hotter or colder than others, your furnace is likely to blame. As furnaces age, they have a harder and harder time pushing air out evenly throughout a home.

Unusually Loud and Noisy

Rattles, buzzes, hums, and other loud or unusual noises can be due to cracks, leaks, and other structural issues that are often beyond repair.
